

September Sites of Interest

Contributed by Laura Salvaggio
Wednesday, 19 September 2007

Here are a couple sites that caught my attention this month.

Theatre Port - This site, frankly, caught my interest when they offered me column space. We're working out the details, but in the near future you will be able to read some Theater Helper content on their site. While that is what caught my interest, they also have some interesting stuff going on on their site. Theater Helper will not be the only column there, and they keep up with a lot of the theater news, particularly pertaining to the Houston area. (They even have audition notices... if they had Houston area tech job postings they just might be perfect... maybe they will in the future.)

Philadelphia Theatre Alliance - This is kind of the Philly version of the Houston site above. I thought it might be nice to include a comparison. I like the layout of the Houston site better because it feels more like the community is involved... but Philly posts the tech jobs. Additionally, this site is interesting right now because October 1 is their presentation of the Barrymore Awards, Philadelphia's version of the Tony's. Since I lived in Philly for a number of years, I know many nominees. (Therefore, my vote is for Meghan Heimbecker as "Outstanding Supporting Actress," and InterAct for the collaboration nomination... but I can't vote for most of the rest as I have multiple loyalties. Oh well.) Check them out.